Common winter illnesses

In colder countries, winter is the season when people are more likely to get common illnesses such as colds or flu. In some countries, such as the UK, an adult can get a cold between one and six times each year and children sometimes get more.

When you have a cold you often feel tired and find it difficult to breathe through your nose. You may also have a sore throat and a cough. The good news is that a cold is not serious and you usually feel better after four to seven days.

Another winter illness is the flu. The main symptoms are often a temperature and a headache. People may feel weak and vomit. Flu is worse than a cold because it can sometimes cause more serious illnesses, such as pneumonia.

You can get a cold or flu from other people, if they are ill and cough near you. If you start feeling sick, get medical help and medicine that will help you get better. When you go to a doctor they may give you pills, for example, antibiotics. These will help get rid of the virus and the infection. They may also tell you to take a painkiller if you've got a headache.

If you get a bad cold or flu this winter, drink lots of water and rest at home. Colds or flu are usually more infectious in the first few days and may easily spread to other people. So it is better to stay at home and recover from your illness.
